No decision yet on fall emergency hours

by Jack Brezina

St. Joseph's Hospital Board has bypassed the recommendation of the Haliburton Community Advisory Committee and asked the board's finance committee to examine the hours of operation and funding of the Minden Hospital Emergency Department. The action was taken at the Board's monthly meeting held in Peterborough Tuesday (September 5).

The Community Advisory Committee, a group established over a year ago to provide the board with local input into decisions affecting the two county hospitals, had recommended the emergency service at the Minden site be reduced to 16 hours daily, seven days a week. The emergency department would be closed from midnight to 8 a.m. During the closed period emergency cases would be handled at the Haliburton Hospital or transferred to hospitals outside the county.

Director of the two hospitals Foster Loucks, explained to the board that the reduced hours were needed to ease the financial strain on the hospital's budget.

Earlier this summer, doctors from outside the area were employed on a 24 a day basis, at a guaranteed rate of pay, to keep the emergency department operational. A portion of the emergency on call service was provided by two doctors, Chayer and Warsi, who were already practising family medicine in the community. Both these doctors left the community last week, leaving no local physicians to assist at the emergency department.

A number of doctors continue to provide clinic services at the newly purchased Lions Medical Centre, but none are available to service the emergency department. As Loucks explained, this has increased the financial strain on the hospital budget.

Loucks told the meeting that the 24 hours a day agreement between the hospital and the emergency room doctors expires at the end of September. Following negotiations and extensive discussion by the Community Advisory Committee, the doctors had agreed that a 16 hour a day operation would be acceptable to them. He said the doctors had indicated that a service period of less than 16 hours was not attractive for the doctors serving the emergency department. These doctors, who specialize in emergency medicine, travel from Lindsay and Barrie to service the emergency department.

Loucks said it is important to come to a formal agreement shortly because these doctors must also draw up their own schedules in their home communities. He added it is unfair and could jeopardize the ability of the doctors to serve the Minden facility if an arrangement is not struck immediately.

While the recommendation came from the Community Advisory Committee and had the approval of the doctors now serving the Minden emergency department, other members of the St. Joseph's board were reluctant to accept the proposal. Several members of the board expressed concern about the impact the continuing payment of doctors would have on the local hospital's budget.

Questioned by the trustees, Loucks told the meeting that despite a summer which saw the emergency department as busy as past years, the hospital was still required to provide $300 to $1200 a day to "top up" the guaranteed amount the doctors had been promised. (Under the arrangement, the emergency room doctors were guaranteed $85 per hour. Any fees for services these doctors generated would be subtracted from this guaranteed amount.)

It was suggested at the meeting that maintaining the Minden emergency service on a 24 hour a day basis during the summer months, the busiest time of the year, still cost the hospital an average of $1000 per day. "At this rate it could result in a serious financial situation for the hospital," one member of the board suggested. A second trustee pointed out that since emergency room usage will drop off now that the summer is past, the cost could be even higher to continue with the current arrangement, even if the operation are cut to 16 hours.

The trustees suggested sev-

County infrastructure funding finally receives approval

by Andrew Milne

Infrastructure funding was officially approved last week for an addition to the county building.

Haliburton County Warden Ross Rabjohn said he is very much looking forward to having the addition built.

"It's badly needed and long overdue. There are just so many things with the old building that needed to be attended to — the leaks in the roof, the plumbing problems, the bricks that are falling off the outside. We could have spent our third of the money in order just to do the needed repairs. This way we'll get the job done properly — not just a patch up sort of thing," Rabjohn commented on Friday.

The $749,000 infrastructure project has followed a somewhat tortuous path to this point.

Deliberations regarding the construction of a new county building to replace the aging facility on Newcastle Street have been ongoing for most of a decade. Late in 1994, however, the county applied for and received approval for a new, $2.4 million building to be located on the Highway 35 bypass. Shepherded into being by Lutterworth reeve Jim McMahon, then county warden, the project would have cost the county around $800,000. McMahon described it as "a long-term solution" to the county's facility problems. It was hoped, he said, that the building would also be able to house a number of other government services, including perhaps the OPP detachment. The Minden detachment is currently located on the 35 bypass, but will require new facilities shortly.

Immediately following the 1994 municipal elections, however, there seems to have been a shift in the balance of power on county council. McMahon was not returned as warden. The new council, in its first working meeting, on January 18, 1995, deliberated for some time in closed session regarding the project, then voted to redirect

Council chamber, court room opened

Although it has been in operation since June 1, the new Ontario Provincial Court and Municipal Council Chambers building was officially opened on Friday afternoon.

An estimated 100 people took part in the opening ceremonies on Milne Street. Clayton Cameron, Anson, Hindon and Minden Public Works Superintendent was the master of ceremonies for the event. He introduced some of the guests, including MPP Chris Hodgson, Provincial Minister of Natural Resources and Northern Development and Mines; Victoria-Haliburton MP John O'Reilly; Anson, Hindon and Minden Reeve Jean Anthon, Deputy-Reeve Lewis Stevens and councillors Jerry Rome, Grant Plooard and Daryl Moore; and County Warden Ross Rabjohn. He also acknowledged the presence of council members and staff from neighbouring municipalities.

The provincial and federal representatives spoke briefly and then, Hodgson and O'Reilly presented Ontario and Canada flags to Reeve Anthon to be placed in the building.

"The citizens of Anson, Hindon and Minden are grateful to the federal and provincial governments for their assistance in this project. The multi-purpose function of this facility has retained the courts locally, enabling a vital presence if the Ontario Provincial Police in Haliburton County, as well as facilitating our local municipal government and community," Reeve Anthon said. "Through the use of local trades and skills, this project has boosted our economy and provided the opportunity to proceed with several projects at one-third dollars.

"This project started with the previous council and I wish to acknowledge former Reeve Bern Berry who, perhaps because of his police background, especially understood the need to keep the court facilities in Haliburton (County).

"This project would not have a successful conclusion without the extraordinary teamwork of the department heads Clayton Cameron and Tammy McKelvey and all the staff and employees," she said, extending thanks on behalf of council.

Live entertainment was provided by the Northland Brass Quintet and the Times Four Saxophone Quartet. Anthon thanked musical director Walter Barnes and band members Travis Leonard, Craig Saunders, Ben Ripley, Donald Todd, Ian MacKenzie, Matt Heffer, Matthew Hamilton, Kevin Brezina and Sheamus Donnery for their musical support on the special occasion.

39,000 attend Kinmount Fair

The 124th annual Kinmount Agricultural Fair enjoyed close to record crowds on the Labour Day weekend. Guy Scott of the Kinmount Fair Board said that attendance was up on the Saturday of the event and if the trend had continued, the 1995 fair would have surpassed last year's mark of 40,000. Scott estimated this year's attendance at 39,000. The threat of rain on Sunday kept the attendance lower than 1994.

Christa Chiasson of Burnt River was chosen Queen of the Fair.

A total of 85 contestants took part in the Talent Show over two days. Talent Show winners included the following:

Vocalists

Novice - first, Jason MacDonald.
 Junior - first, Christine Winfield.
 Intermediate - first, Alicia Sales.
 Senior ladies - first, Martha Burns.
 Senior men - first, Terry Obie.
 Fiddle - first, Don Weeks.
 Step dance - first, Lyndsey Booth.
 Instrumental - first, Jamie Walker of Kinmount (guitar).

Horse pulls

Heavy horse - first, Scott Nesbitt of Minden.
 Light horse - first, Keith Hobdon of Lindsay.

More than 400 beef cattle were entered in the judging and the poultry class, which was held for the first time this year, also had about 400 entries.

Tommy Hunter made his second appearance at the Kinmount Fair this year. The first time was 23 years ago, in 1972. At that time, the CBC filmed the Tommy Hunter Show on location at the Kinmount Fair.

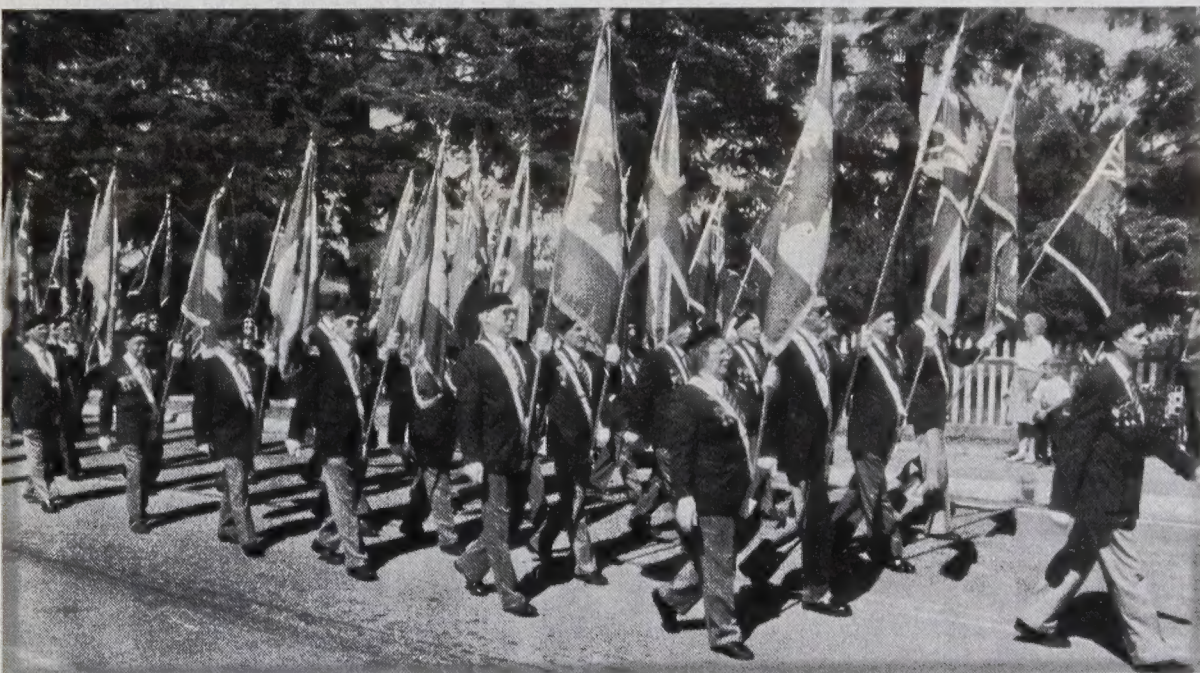

The group Montana Sky also entertained.

The 1995 event also featured a demolition derby and monster trucks. A model railway was set up in a tent and Highlands Cinema had a display from the past 100 years in the movie industry.

Report proposes Haliburton board be combined with Victoria, Peterborough and Northumberland-Clarington

Little support for proposed four county board

by Andrew Milne

A provincial task force has just recommended that the Haliburton County Board of Education be amalgamated with three other, larger boards.

The new combined board would comprise the area currently administered by the Haliburton, Victoria, Peterborough, and Northumberland-Clarington boards. That area currently contains a student population of approximately 57,000 students in over 130 schools. In terms of geographical area, it would become the largest board in southern Ontario, and would consist of nine elected trustees.

The Haliburton board administers 2,300 students in eight schools, and consists of 15 trustees.

The task force had been given instructions to reduce the number of school boards in Ontario and has proposed similar amalgamation throughout the province towards that purpose. The report also recommended a number of other changes to the educational system, including greater responsibilities for parent councils, reform to the current method by which taxes for education are collected, and that the Ministry of Education and Training (MOET) take over establishing curriculum from the school boards. The overall intended goal had been to reduce the cost of administration in the educational system.

Haliburton board chair Wendy Ladurantaye said she was quite surprised to see the size of the board proposed.

"When you consider the population densities in the southern end," said Ladurantaye, "Newcastle, Peterborough, Lindsay, Cobourg — those are all fairly significant areas. They're going to give trustees no doubt to where the fixed populations are. So I don't know whether Haliburton would get a trustee, or whether maybe we'd get just one. One has to wonder how that works with respect to accountability."

Board director Brad Saunders said that the recommendations of the task force's report left him with a number of questions he feels are entirely crucial to the exercise. And until he knows the answers, he says, he really can't say what are the actual ramifications of the proposal.

Said Saunders, "I think the government has to answer three fundamental issues. One: are they in fact serious about taking over the curriculum role in the province? Secondly, are they at all willing to entertain the notion of province wide collective bargaining with employee groups? And thirdly, and I think most significantly, the whole issue of educational finance becomes really, really fundamental here. Tying it into the whole issue of educational finance is the role of parent councils. This new government has not yet provided any clarity on the role of parent councils. Because if indeed parent councils are going to take over the same kind of role that board trustees have performed previously, the concerns about the local touch being lost will be eased considerably. But we don't know the answer to that."

Saunders also says he wonders what role the proposed measures will leave for boards of education.

Said Saunders, "If the government intends, as it has been alluded from time to time, to take away from boards the right to raise taxes locally, to raise the monies locally, then if you take away from a board of education curriculum involvement, collective bargaining responsibility, and the ability to make a budget and to raise money in association with that budget, then you tend to be left saying what will the role of a board of education be in this new world?"

Reduction mandate

The task force on school board amalgamation was commissioned by former (NDP) Minister of Education David Cooke in February 24, 1995, shortly before the provincial election in which his government was unseated by Michael Harris' Tories.

Cooke gave the task force the mandate of reducing the number of school boards by between 40 and 50 percent. It was also supposed to "advise the Minister on the financial impact of its recommendations".

The task force's interim report, however, released September 6, contains no estimates of how large the savings will be should their proposal be followed. It does assert there will be savings, provided there is significant and simultaneous reform of the system by which taxes are raised to pay for education, and provided that the newly created boards make some efforts to share services.

The new minister of education, John Snobelen, has so far expressed only "interest" in the report, and there is some question how seriously his government will take the task force's findings. The chair of the task force, John Sweeney, has strong Liberal ties, and was appointed at a time when the Liberals were riding high in the polls. There's some speculation Cooke had in mind, when he appointed Sweeney, that his task force would be reporting to a Liberal provincial government, not a Progressive Conservative one.

But organizations such as the Ontario Taxpayers Federation endorsed Cooke's initiative soon after its announcement. It was viewed as a positive step towards reducing spending. This leaves the Harris government in an interesting political position with respect to the task force's findings.

But Snobelen has already made one move some observers find quite ominous. He has eliminated the public consultation meetings Cooke had intended to take place following the release of the interim report. The task force says it still wants to hear from the public, but the public will have to come to it — through presentations in writing, by fax or e-mail, or by leaving a verbal message on the telephone hotlines. Public meetings, however, are out.

Savings?

The recent report of the Royal Commission on Learning found after its deliberations that the savings to be had from amalgamation would not be significant, despite public perceptions to the contrary. Ontario, noted the Commission, already has the lowest number of school boards per capita in the country.

Certainly, the savings to be realized from reducing the number of trustees are

Ten year dream becomes a reality

Emergency House opens

by Andrew Milne

On September 9, with a flurry of ribbons, speeches, and songs, the Women's Emergency House finally opened.

It was a time of celebration for many involved. The people whose dreams launched this project all of a decade ago got their due. The organizers who coordinated, encouraged, and supported legions of volunteers had their moment in the sun, shook hands, accepted their gifts and their deserved applause.

Trish Skibinsky spoke briefly, tersely. "I'm not much of a speaker," she said, apologetically.

There was nonetheless respectful silence as she delivered her message to the community — perhaps the most important message of the afternoon.

"I moved to Haliburton County about five years ago," said Skibinsky. "I was an abuse victim, and I had no place to go."

"I was lucky though," she continued, "I had a few friends at the Women's Safety Network. They gave me support and helped me to get on with my life. I was a victim. Now I'm a survivor."

"For any women coming here, I hope they have the courage to make that first step. Once you get here, the rest is down hill. You can start your life over, and if you don't know where you're going, and you're confused, there are women and volunteers here to help you and your children. Don't be victims. Be survivors."

The afternoon's speeches sketched, in between the countless thank yous for the countless invaluable contributions which made this facility a reality, a brief, capsule history of the project.

The story of the house, a volunteer-run short-term stay facility for women and children fleeing domestic abuse, really goes back ten years, as Susan Wilson,

Like the project itself, many hands were involved when the ceremonial ribbon was cut to mark the opening of the Women's Emergency House in Haliburton on Saturday.

public relations coordinator for the most recent phase of the project, explained.

It was then, said Wilson, that Zoe Chilco, a local musician, got the ball rolling, organizing a fundraising concert which also first put the issue on the public agenda.

From Chilco's first concert, it was a long road. Jude King, "the heart of this project", as Wilson called her, who was involved from the beginning, also spoke briefly, expressing her gratitude to all who assisted, her happiness at seeing the house up, standing, and ready to serve.

"It's a happy day for me," said King, "and it's an emotional day too, because it's been a long time coming."

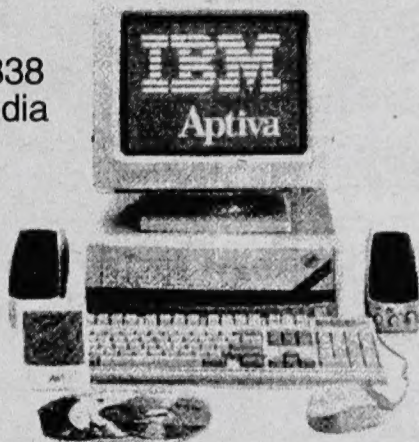

Wilson also thanked Karen Gustafson, who coordinated work crews during the construction of the house; Jim Blake, who participated in publicity and fundraising; Gena Robertson, director of SIRCH; Steve Bowskill, owner of the Hillside House facility, and countless others. Above all, she said, she thanked all in the community who volunteered for the project or supported it in other ways.

Said Wilson, "This day represents the fulfillment of a great deal of hard work and determination and persistence. But above all it represents the outstanding commitment of this community to create a place where women and their children can come to begin the process of moving away from domestic violence... This house is a tribute to you and your commitment and your contribution."

Fall emergency department hours still uncertain

Baker urges board to remember its commitment to service

eral scenarios, including reducing the emergency room operation to just 12 hours a day, while a number implied the facility may have to be closed altogether. It was suggested that before the matter is approved, the board's finance committee be asked to examine the impact of any new agreement.

It was pointed out that the finance committee does not meet until September 15 and that the next board meeting would be several weeks after that leaving little time, if any, for a workable agreement to be reached with the emergency room doctors.

Stuart Baker, one of two trustees representing Haliburton County, made an impassioned plea to the board. He asked the board members not to just consider the financial implications of any decision. "We must take into consideration the people of the area....we have made a commitment to meeting their needs."

He told the meeting that while there is a need to consider the financial implications, the community relies on the services provided by the emergency department. The former educator pointed out that the elementary school in Minden has over 700 students, and the population of the area increases substantially when the cottagers and area children's camps are taken into consideration.

Baker, who is also a member of the Acting Health Services Board, pointed out the provincial government has given approval for a $10.6 million enhancement of health services in the county, including the relocation of emergency services to the Hyland Crest site. He suggested if the emergency service were discontinued, it would be difficult for the Health Services Board to reactivate it. "It would be highly unlikely that the Ministry of Health would look kindly on reopening that portion of the project," he told his fellow trustees.

His stand drew the support of a number of other trustees who suggested the board should proceed cautiously about making any drastic changes to the services offered at the Minden hospital site. (Earlier this year, in response to the dwindling number of doctors in the community and in an effort to save some money to support the continued operation of the emergency department, the in-patient acute care beds at the hospital were closed. Those beds remain closed.)

When it appeared that a majority of the board favoured having the matter referred to the finance committee, it was suggested that any decision to come from that meeting recognize that a 12 hour a day, seven day a week emergency service be the minimum that was acceptable. It was suggested that with this base in place, at least for the immediate future, the community could be assured of some services.

Before the discussion concluded, one member of the hospital staff suggested that the crisis at the Minden Hospital was precipitated by the departure of physicians leaving the community and not the result of anything the hospital board had done.

The finance committee will examine the issue September 15.

Renovations get green light

the funds — with $749,000 going to renovations to the existing building, and an expansion wing. The explanation given by most was they felt the proposed new building was simply too expensive.

The purpose of the January 18 closed session had been stated as the discussion of "property matters" related to the acquisition of the real estate on which the new building would have been constructed. Such matters are usually discussed in closed session, due to the hazards related to letting the market know the government is interested in a purchase.

McMahon said afterwards, however, that there had been only the briefest mention of the value of the property itself during the session. Dysart reeve Murray Fearrey, after the session, said he had no idea what the value of the property itself actually was, though he was able to hazard a guess. And the motion that was taken to redirect the funds to other projects was taken immediately after the closed session, with virtually no public discussion.

The redirection took some time. Infrastructure projects are jointly approved and administered by both the provincial Ministry of Municipal Affairs (MMA) and the federal department, Industry Canada. The county's initial proposal was unacceptable because the $920,000 slice directed to lower tier municipalities had not been directed to specific projects.

Official word has not yet been received on whether the proposed municipal projects have been approved.

Rabjohn says he expects the renovations and the new wing to be completed late next spring, provided the contractors are ready, as originally intended, to break ground this month.

Says Rabjohn, "I'm certainly looking forward to it. Our social services people were in desperate straits. We gave them the council chambers, but it's all makeshift. It's just been an awful turmoil — what our staff has had to put up with over the last little while. It's going to be just great to have a proper facility."

The Hawk Lake Topple Hawk

by Andrew Mine

Serene and dignified, the great bird flies again at the narrows between Big and Little Hawk Lake.

It's the Tlingit-Haida/Topple Hawk, top totem on the totem pole — first brought here as a goodwill gift from the United States in 1958.

It flew for thirty years, a landmark until 1988, when the twister that cut through the lake that year brought it down, splintering the then rotted wood into countless pieces.

Next summer, says George Topple, it will fly again.

The totem pole that originally stood at the narrows was carved by Topple's father and uncle — George Topple Sr. and Michael Cubitt — in the summer of 1958.

It was originally just "something to do" for his uncle, says Topple. But with time, it became something of an icon, a favourite target for amateur photographers, and a channel marker, up until the storm of 1988 destroyed it.

"It's been kind of a landmark on the lake," he says. "At one time it did have lights on it. There was sufficient colour in it that people could use it as a navigation aid so they wouldn't hit the sand bar."

So, he says, when a suitably large white pine was brought down nearby by the winds of this year's violent July 16 storm, he decided it was time to make a replacement.

So a few weeks ago, he and a gang of cottagers from around the lake gathered to haul the pole down the slope, float it across the lake, and drag it up on to his lawn.

"It was," he says, "quite an operation."

The top of the original pole had been brought up by his uncle from Spencer Port, New York in the front seat of his car. "A goodwill gift," says Topple.

Today, Topple has two guests at the cottage, grinding away with power tools and chisels at the 1600 pound

chunk of pine on his lawn. Fred

Welbourne,

another cottager on the lake who happens to be good with a set of chisels, and Bill Wheeler, a friend who also happens to be a retired high school art head.

It was Wheeler, working from photographs of the original Hawk Lake pole (little remained after the storm, which seems to have virtually twisted it out of the ground by its wings), who designed the new one. His drawings sit next to the pole today.

Says Wheeler, "I looked up what I could find on totem poles, and I had the records on the original, so I took just a few liberties."

The designs, he says, are all taken from Haida and Tlingit motifs. In the original totem poles, he says, the animals on the pole would represent the clans within the tribe that had carved it. "In this case," he says, pointing to the pole and his design, "you would have had the Eagle clan (the 'Topple Hawk' is of somewhat uncertain species), dominant at the top here, and the bear clan, and the frog clan."

The eagle and the bear, he says, are from the original pole. He couldn't make out on the photographs what was at the bottom of the pole, so the frog is his own touch, though also inspired by motifs on authentic poles.

So do these totems represent Hawk Lake clans?

He smiles. "That's why I'm calling it 'The Topple Hawk'," he says.

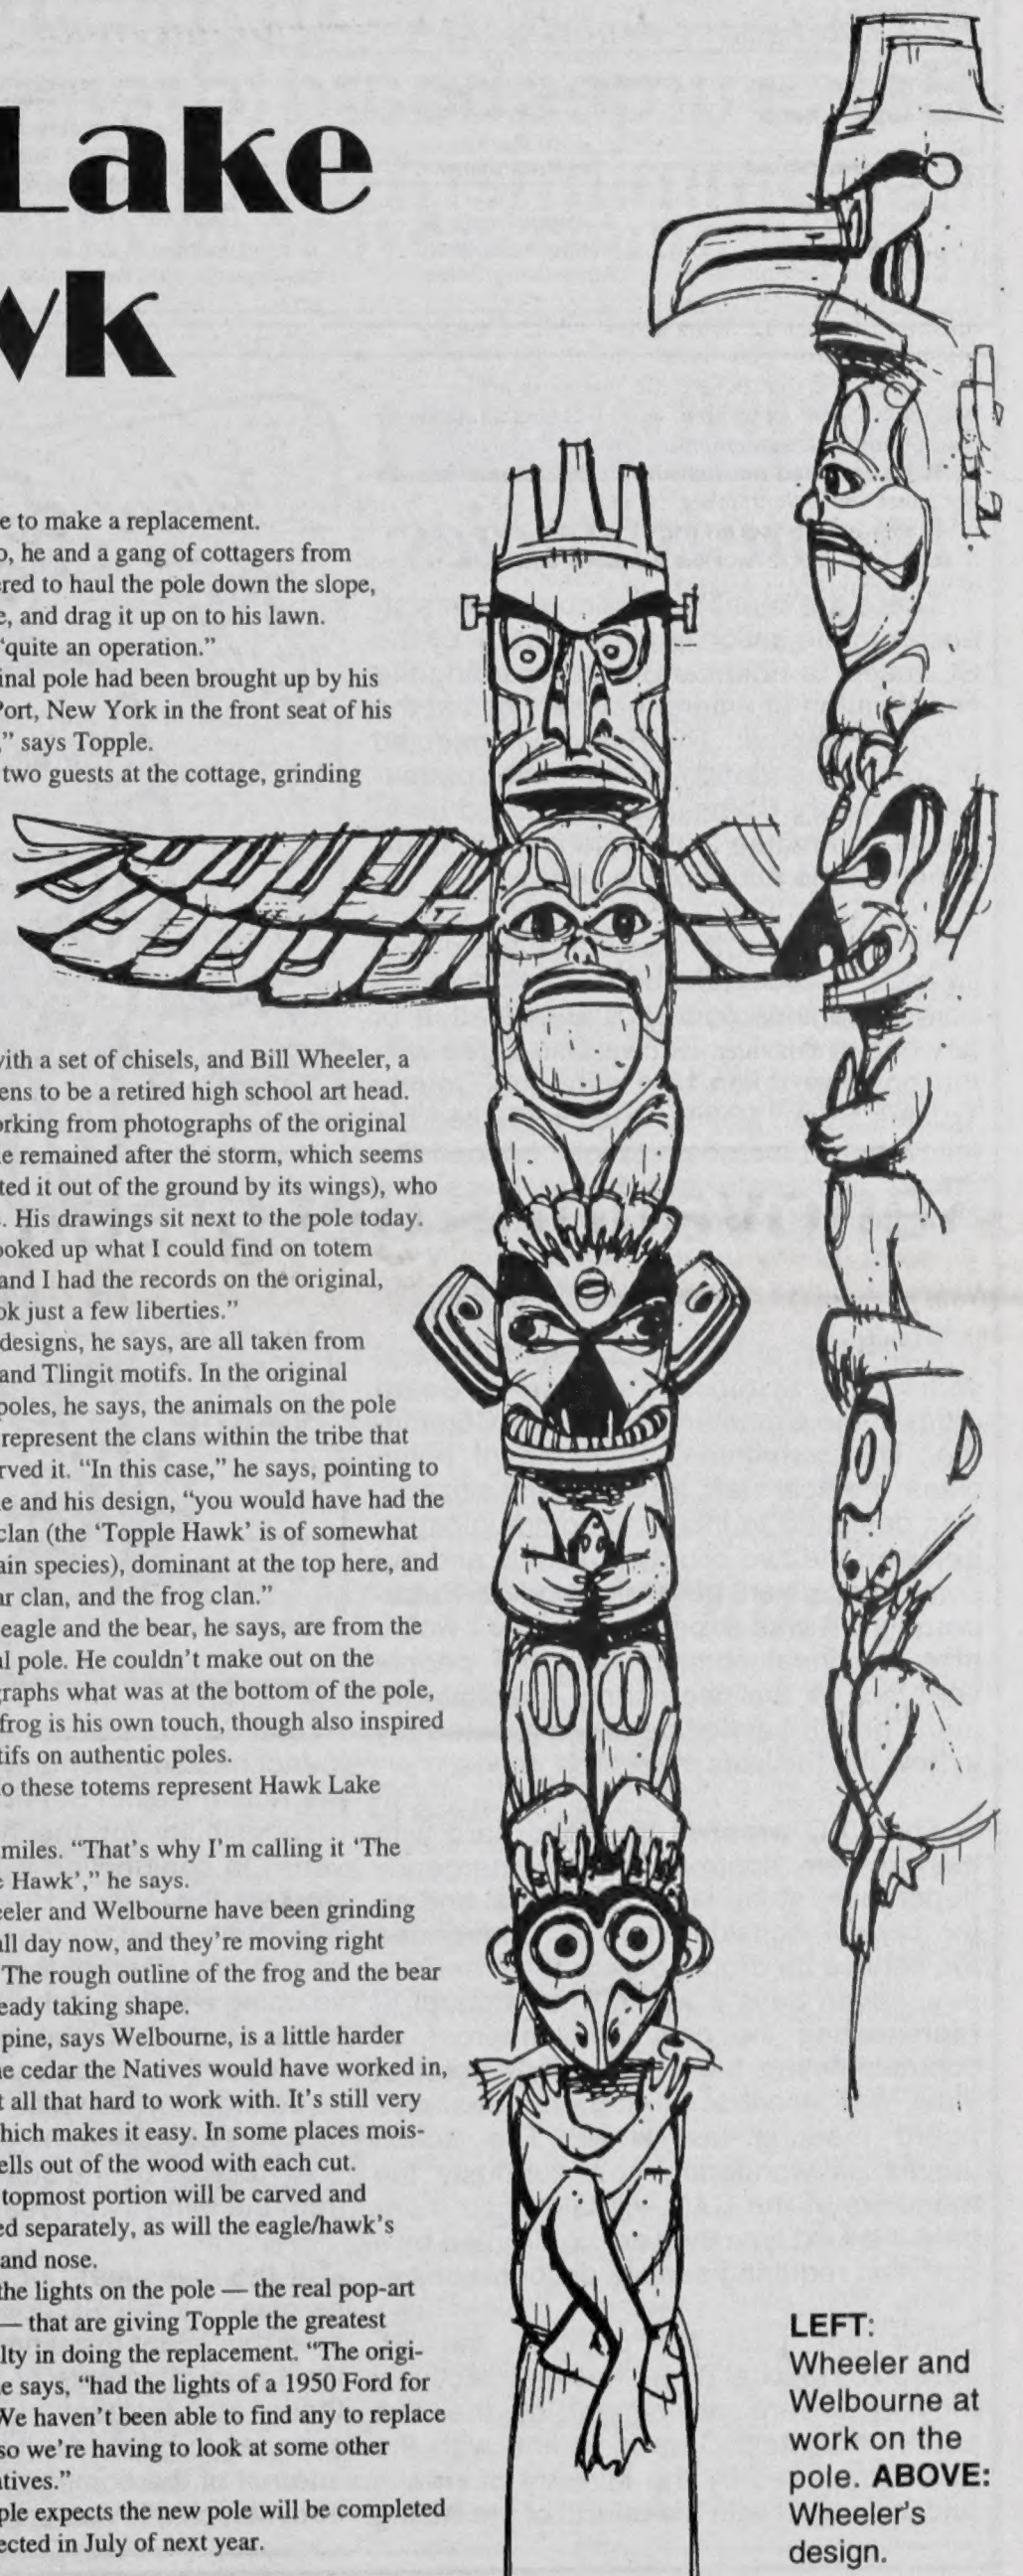

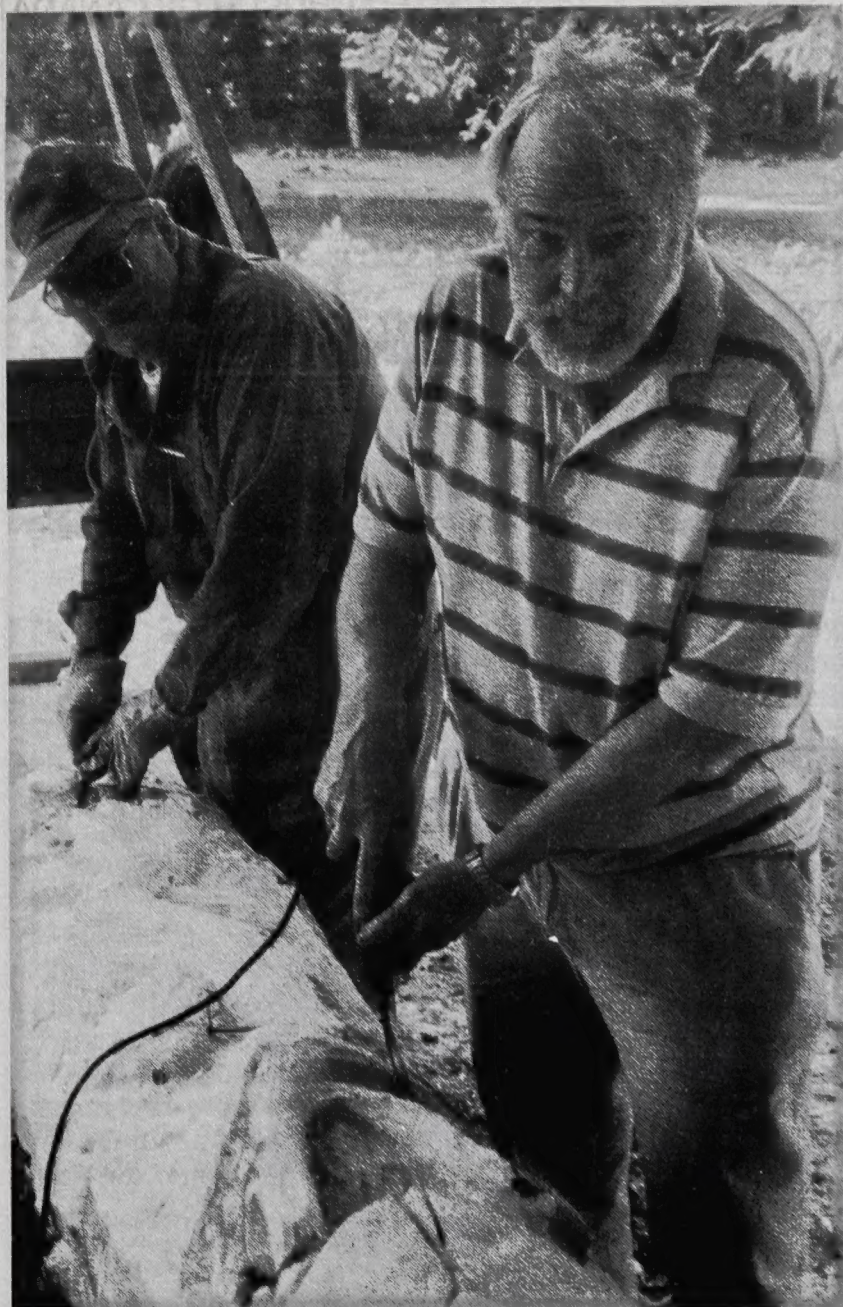

Wheeler and Welbourne have been grinding away all day now, and they're moving right along. The rough outline of the frog and the bear are already taking shape.

The pine, says Welbourne, is a little harder than the cedar the Natives would have worked in, but not all that hard to work with. It's still very wet, which makes it easy. In some places moisture wells out of the wood with each cut.

The topmost portion will be carved and attached separately, as will the eagle/hawk's wings and nose.

It's the lights on the pole — the real pop-art touch — that are giving Topple the greatest difficulty in doing the replacement. "The original," he says, "had the lights of a 1950 Ford for eyes. We haven't been able to find any to replace them, so we're having to look at some other alternatives."

Topple expects the new pole will be completed and erected in July of next year.

Inconsistencies

There are number of serious inconsistencies in the action taken last week by the St. Joseph's Hospital Board regarding the continuation of emergency services at the Minden Hospital. The Board has rejected the recommendation of the local Community Advisory Committee and asked its finance committee to provide a recommendation on the future of the service.

First, we acknowledge that in this day of limited resources, the bottom line is an important consideration in the operation of any health service. But we also agree with the position taken by Haliburton County Trustee Stuart Baker, when he asked his fellow board members to look beyond the dollars and cents and realize there is a community of people who will be seriously affected by any decision to drastically reduce the hours of operation at the hospital.

Following a report prepared several years ago, St. Joseph's Hospital Board created the Community Advisory Committee. The committee, made up of politicians, medical staff, trustees, and citizens, was designed to increase communication between the two county hospitals and the somewhat distant governing body in Peterborough. It was expected the CAC would give the local communities, the people who look to the two county hospitals for many health service needs, a greater say in how the facilities meet their needs.

The CAC wrestled long and hard with the problem confronting the emergency department at the Minden Hospital and after careful consideration, recommended the service be dropped back to 16 hours a day, seven days a week. That attempt at representing the community interest, at communicating the community's point of view, was swept aside at the St. Joseph's board meeting last week. The action leaves us wondering how seriously the members of the CAC will take their mandate the next time they are confronted by a question requiring serious deliberation.

For the past six months, the St. Joseph's Hospital Board has been actively moving toward divestment of the two county hospitals. This is in line with the plans proposed by the Ministry of Health and in concert with the efforts of the Acting Health Services Board. (The Hospital Board in fact has set a tentative agenda that sees the Acting Health Services Board assuming responsibility for the hospitals early next year.) In conjunction with this, much of the work of the Acting Health Services Board has been preparation to assume the responsibility. Part of the effort has been developing a vision of the future of health care in the county. At a minimum, in institutional services, that vision includes the provision of emergency services in Minden. That vision has been reiterated in a number of motions passed by the board and in responses from the Ministry of Health.

If the divestment of the two hospitals is as close as the St. Joseph's board thinks, then this is not the time to be tinkering with the basic elements of service provided at these two facilities. Indeed, if there are changes to be made, it would be in the best interest of the community for the governing body which still has control over the two facilities to tailor its actions to the vision of the local board which is expected to assume responsibility for them in little more than half a year.

Minden is struggling to rebuild its medical community. Just over a week ago an important step in that process was marked with the opening of the Lions Medical Centre. Other groups and individuals are working hard to create a medical service sector based on the plans expressed by the Acting Health Services Board.

Hopefully, the members of St. Joseph's Hospital Board will realize that it is inappropriate and counter-productive to institute any policies which will impede that vision or run contrary to what the new board hopes to accomplish when it assumes responsibility for the hospitals and medical services.

Will the Sweeney proposal really improve accountability?

by Andrew Milne

At first blush, the issues surrounding the recent proposal to reduce, by amalgamation, the number of school boards in this province seem to have a singular simplicity.

To put it as concisely as possible, the Sweeney commission has told Ontario that the bureaucracies within the school boards have become unnecessarily large, complex, and expensive, and that the boards need to be accountable to the public about reducing them.

Behind the Reader's Digest version of the argument, however, are layers of complexity and contradiction, and a number of very important questions anyone to whom this issue is important (and that's most of the population of this province) should ask.

Perhaps among the most critical of these is the issue of accountability.

The Sweeney task force has stated that the purpose of the proposed reforms is to increase the public accountability of the people who run Ontario's schools.

Yet the task force — beside other suggestions which more obviously lead to such an outcome — has also proposed that the number of trustees be reduced so that, in the case of this region, there could be one trustee on the board for something like every 6,000 students in the system.

Consider that. Whatever one might think of the actual performance of trustees, the election of those trustees is the one way in which, every few years, individual ratepayers have a very direct control over their school board. These trustees are supposed to be the voice of the public in determining policy in the educational system. Layers of bureaucracy above them in the Ministry of Education and Training (MOET) and below them in their own board's administration may have names and roles the public will never hear, and an active life in the system that far outstrips the elected representatives. But trustees, in theory at least, are directly accountable to their public. They have to run to keep their office every few years. If the public doesn't like what a trustee is doing, he/she can easily lose. And with 15 trustees within their borders, the citizens of this county should be having a much easier time, now, finding one of them to carry grievances and concerns to the board meetings than they would if the task force's recommendations are followed.

In other words: the task force says it wants to increase accountability. Yet it proposes to drastically reduce the elected parts of those boards — the parts of the boards that are most directly accountable to the public. Does this not seem contradictory?

The task force has also proposed another layer of public representation which may well make up for this, if done properly. The parent councillor, whose role would apparently be larger and more universal than it is currently, could well wind up taking over part of the responsibility.

Consider, however, the other possible outcome of moving, as has been proposed, to a system with fewer, larger boards, with fewer trustees: those supposedly arbitrary and bloated bureaucracies, with larger areas to administer may very well end up even more powerful, and more remote from the average ratepayer. With potentially poorly prepared, isolated parent councils as the first line of public representation, and with the provincial government apparently taking more and more of the powers of the boards unto itself, the people of this province may well find themselves, a few years down the road, wondering whether the people in their board office work for them or for the MOET — and longing for the days when the bureaucracy they wished to control was right next door instead of several hours away.

All of this merely goes as prologue. It's hard to say at this point, especially with the rather notable lack of definition in the task force's report, what would be the actual outcome of the proposed reforms.

There are obvious possible advantages to this area in a plan like this as well, and this is worth considering. Ratepayers in this relatively impoverished area might well find being amalgamated with areas whose development is more robust makes their lives a little easier. Larger school boards also generally have a much better ability to serve more diverse needs within their systems — the Haliburton high school for example, while academically respected, is of necessity an institution designed primarily to provide a very general bread-and-butter type of education. It graduates good well-rounded students, but anyone looking for more specialized instruction in music, the dramatic arts, or the fine arts, has to wait until the post-secondary level — in contrast to students in larger boards which often have a choice of high schools, some of which will specialize in these areas.

Finally, with so drastic a change in course for the educational system on the table (and make no mistake about how far-reaching these reforms would be), the public really should consider closely the rather odd way in which this proposal came into being.

Bizarre as it might seem, the task force was never actually instructed to determine if amalgamation is necessarily a good thing (the recent Royal Commission on Learning, incidentally, which did briefly consider that more fundamental question, found that it was not). The task force was told, quite simply, that it was to reduce the number of school boards in the province by 40 to 50 percent. The man who told them to do that, former minister of education David Cooke, never even attempted to explain what was so magical about that number. He had, as far as anyone knows, nothing concrete telling him this was a good idea. It would not be unreasonable to speculate at this point that it came to him in a dream.

It is not surprising then that the task force came up with proposals like the one that most directly affects the people of this area — a board of 57,000 students, stretching from Dorset to the shores of Lake Ontario, governed by nine trustees. The agenda they were given left them little choice. That agenda itself, however, seems to have sprung magically from nowhere.

All things considered, the public's interest may best be served by telling the government to send it right back where it came from.

No evil geniuses or Machiavellian masterminds

The time has come, my friends to dip once again into the Dumb Crooks File. That is where your obedient scrivener keeps his collection of recent news reports illustrating the proposition that citizens of the outlaw persuasion are not all that bright. That felonious folk are not evil geniuses or Machiavellian masterminds. That they more often fall into a corner of history's dust bin reserved for idiots, dunderheads, buffoons and chowder brains with a lower collective IQ of a sackful of turnips.

Examples? Just about everywhere you look. Last week's copy of the International Herald Tribune for instance, which carried the sad tale of Gerald Lyndell Voyles.

Mister Voyles, a native Floridian, recently turned up before the desk of the Sheriff of Bartow, Florida. He was there to collect a $3,000 reward, he said. A reward that was being offered for the apprehension of a man wanted for murder.

A man by the name of ... Gerald Lyndell Voyles.

That's right — gormless Gerald actually expected to collect the bounty that had been placed on his own head.

"We believe he was serious about the reward," opined the Sheriff. "He will not be eligible."

Proceed directly to jail, Gerald and don't even think of passing Go.

A convict named Hubert Schurr was a little more enterprising than Voyles, but not a whole lot swifter. Schurr managed to break out of a penitentiary on the outskirts of Hamburg, Germany last month. Schurr made it to the shoulder of an Autobahn clambered up to the roadway and stuck out his thumb.

Schurr was one lift away from disappearing into the, ahem, tenderloin district of Hamburg — and look! A car is slowing down, pulling off to the side of the road! Exultant, Schurr Yanks open the passenger door, preparing to thank the driver...

...only to find himself staring into the unamused puss of one Gerhard Stroh, warden of the joint Schurr had escaped from.

Schurr got a lift alright, but it involved a U-turn.

Another German crook — convicted bank robber Heinrich Krioss — escaped from a German maximum security prison at about the same time. He was arrested three days later, but he had a perfectly reasonable explanation: he hadn't escaped at all. He'd been kidnapped by space aliens.

Beam me up Herr Scotty. There's no intelligent life here.

An case of fumbling felony much closer to home — in Moncton, New Brunswick, "where Susan Stokes recently found herself in the dock. Ms. Stokes had run afoul of a section of the Criminal Code which targets anyone "pretending to use witchcraft, sorcery, enchantment or conjuration" to separate gullible citizens from their shekels.

Put plainly, Susan Stokes was posing as a fortune teller and taking money for her 'predictions'.

It wasn't a big deal — the judge ding-ed her 25 bucks or one day in jail.

But then, if Ms. Stokes had been any good as a fortune teller she would have foreseen the impending arrest and spent the day in bed with the covers pulled over her head.

So the score is now, what? Justice 4, Crooks 0?

I'll leave you with the tale of 'Steve', a desperado who proves the Bad Guys aren't always dumb as dirt.

'Steve is a chap who phoned up the security office at Philadelphia International Airport recently. He was "in maintenance" he explained. He had to do some work on the Automatic Teller Machines for the hour or so, so they should just ignore the security alarm if it happened to go off.

The alarm went off...the security guards yawned and worked on their doughnuts.

A passing citizen finally called police and a squad of uniforms eventually arrived to investigate.

They found the door to the cash dispenser swaying in the breeze.

Fifty thousand dollars was missing.

So was Steve.

Described by Minden Toronto Dominion Bank manager Mary Coneybeare as "an exceptional employee", Joanne Camelon was recently honoured with a TD award for banking excellence. "There are only 40 of these awards presented among the 3000 TD employees across the province," Coneybeare said when she made the presentation. The award recognizes Camelon's helpful attitude in dealing with customers and support for other staff in the branch. The occasion was marked with a presentation of flowers by Coneybeare, right. Joanne's daughter, Angela, left, was also on hand to join in the celebration.

Tim George makes history with victory at Cayuga

by Jerry Grozelle

A Polaris snowmobile, which was built from the ground up by Kushog Lake Marine mechanic Tim George, made history on the Labour Day Weekend. The sled, which was driven by Jeff Crawford of Gamma Sales in Orillia, distributor of a new track made for running on pavement, took first place overall in the first ever pavement track race in Canada. That race, called the Gamma Sales-Camoplast Challenge, was held at Dragway Park, Cayuga.

The first race of its kind was held in Brainerd, Minnesota a couple of weeks before the Cayuga race.

Although Tim George is quite modest about his ability to get the best performance out of an engine, his wife

Kimberly doesn't mind telling it like it is. She says he was one of only about eight people in Canada who were invited to get into this new sport on the ground floor. She credits his talent as a mechanic as well as his racing experience. Tim is an avid ice racer with his sled and he accepted the invitation without hesitation.

Tim has about $30,000 worth of tools and equipment, including a Race Pack computer. It is a diagnostic tool (perhaps the only one of its kind in Ontario) which monitors the machine's performance and prints out a record when he gets back to the shop. It is portable, similar to a laptop computer, but without a screen. Tim is also the only mechanic in the county who can "tune" a crankshaft for optimum performance. He also grinds his own clutch weights.

Tim and Kimberly owned Kushog Lake Marine until this past April when they sold it to Bruce and Brenda Newell. The Newells' two sons, Steve and Jason helped Tim out during preliminary trials at Cayuga before the first race.

Tim says that since they have sold the marina, he has more time to get more involved in racing. He stayed with the business as a full-time mechanic. The Newells are strong supporters of Tim's racing. He has a list of other sponsors, including Rudy's (Carnarvon), DJ Machining (Maple Lake), County Sign and Display (Minden), Highlanders Auto Body (Minden), Bliss Garage (Bliss, New York) and Hot To Go Racing (New York).

Tim will be going to Shannonville this weekend to compete on Sunday. This time he plans to be at the controls instead of on the sidelines when the Christmas tree flashes the green light.

He would have driven the sled himself at Cayuga, but a number of factors resulted in Crawford taking the controls for the first race. One factor was that Crawford, an experienced racer as well, couldn't get his machine ready for the race in time. Since this is a new type of racing, George wasn't sure he should spend $1,000 or more for a set of motorcycle leathers to compete in something he wasn't sure would be a success in Canada.

As it turned out, it seems racing fans are looking for something different. The race at Cayuga drew a crowd of 60,000 for a first-time event.

Two racers line up at the start line like a pair of drag racers. The Christmas tree flashes three ambers and a green in sequence and on the green, it's full throttle to the finish line a quarter-mile straight ahead.

They use a type of handicap, or bracket system. Competitors must predict how fast they can do the quarter-mile. As George explained, if one racer can do it in 12 seconds flat and another can do it in 11.5 seconds, the sled with the slower time gets his green light a half-second ahead of the faster machine. The first machine across the finish line wins the heat.

"You can't break out of your bracket (if you go faster than you predicted), or you lose," George said.

"We ran against sleds that cost $15,000 and won with my $5,000 machine," George said. "We were beating 900cc (Arctic Cat) Thunder Cats.

The Polaris' time in the quarter-mile was 11.3 seconds at 115 miles per hour.

In any type of drag racing, the difference between a win and a loss is measured in hundredths of a second. George knows exactly how much he can wring out of his 1988 vintage 650 cubic centimetre engine. He is constantly adjusting, replacing and trying different combinations of parts to shave as much as he can off the machine's times -- first in ice racing and now for the paved track.

George says, all you need to run on asphalt, is one of the newly developed tracks designed by Camoplast, and a set of skis with wheels.

Kim said her husband often gets teased that if he was taken to a snowmobile trail a couple of miles from home, he'd be lost. His snowmobiling is almost always on a quarter-mile stretch of ice on Kushog Lake, which he keeps ploughed most of the winter.

HISTORY MAKER: Tim George sits on his Polaris 650 Indy, which won the first pavement race for snowmobiles at Cayuga on the Labour Day weekend.

Highlands hosts Dispro regatta

by Jerry Grozelle

Close to 100 boating enthusiasts from as far away as Georgia, Wisconsin, Pennsylvania and New York State converged on three lodges on Lake Kashagawigamog on the weekend. They brought with them about 30 of "the greatest little motor boats afloat," as they are described in a book by that title.

The occasion was the 17th annual Dispro Owners Association Fall Regatta, which was held for the first time in Haliburton County. Dispro is short for Disappearing Propeller Boat Company Limited.

Bonnie View Inn was the base of operations for the regatta, with All-Hart Bed and Breakfast and Halimar Lodge hosting some of the visitors.

Previous regattas have been held on Stony Lake (near Peterborough), Lake of Bays, Lake Muskoka and Gloucester Pool (near Ottawa).

A total of about 3,100 Dispros were built at Port Carling, Gravenhurst, Lindsay and Tonawanda, New York at various times between 1915 and 1958.

The first Dispro Regatta was held on Lake Rousseau in 1973. The Dispro Owners Association was founded by Joe Fossey and Dr. Jim Smith, with the inaugural meeting held in Barrie on April 29, 1979. Since then, Dispro or "Dippy" enthusiasts have swelled the Association's ranks to about 250 families.

Current president Alan Clipsham of Sparrow Lake (Muskoka) says there is something special about the Dippy's putt, putt rhythm that bonds the owners to their vessels.

Clipsham said that there are several people in the club with restoration experience and skills that they are very willing to share.

"It helps to keep the group together," Clipsham said. "We have a great deal of respect for the pioneer boat builders of Ontario."

In some cases, there are three generations of families who come to Dispro Owners Association events.

Clipsham said the boats are what brought the members together but it is the people themselves that make the association such a close-knit group.

The weekend regatta featured tours of the Kashagawigamog chain of lakes, a wine and cheese party, a dinner at Bonnie View, the Dispro Follies 1995 and an awards presentation.

Single car accident claims passenger's life

A Kinmount man faces a number of charges following an accident on County Road One just east of Highway 121, on September 4. The accident claimed the life of a passenger.

Pedro Desousa, 33, of North York died when the vehicle left the road and struck a tree. According to the police, Desousa was not wearing a seat belt at the time of the accident. Police, fire and ambulance personnel were required to remove the victim from the extensively damaged vehicle. He was taken to Minden Hospital.

The driver, 33 year old William McCluney of Kinmount, sustained minor injuries. He was treated at Minden Hospital and released.

McCluney has been charged with impaired driving causing death and failing to provide a blood sample.

Constable Mark McMaster is the investigating officer.

Saved from flames

An unknown individual or individuals are being credited with saving the life of an Irondale man whose vehicle was involved in a single car accident on Highway 503 September 2.

According to the police, 33 year old Murray Simmons was westbound near Irondale when his vehicle left the road after rounding a curve. The car flipped several times and came to rest on its roof. Unidentified passersby pulled the man from the car just before it burst into flames.

The driver was treated for head lacerations at the Haliburton Hospital.

Glamorgan fire department and first response team were called to the accident scene to extinguish the blaze which spread to an area of bush near the vehicle.

Police had praise for the quick action of the individuals who rescued the man from the car and for the Glamorgan firefighters.

The police investigation into the accident continues.

Break-in

The Gooderham Liquor store was the target of thieves during the Labour day weekend. After cutting the alarm wires, the thieves smashed their way into the store.

They attempted to gain access to the safe, dumped liquor on the floor and, according to police, made off with a half ton truck full of liquor.

The investigation into the incident continues.

Ultralight crash

A Transportation Safety Board of Canada report has concluded that the pilot who died when an ultralight aircraft crashed into the frozen surface of Head Lake in Haliburton had likely suffered a heart attack prior to the crash. The mishap occurred March 15.

55 year old Michael Drew of North York died as a result of injuries sustained in the impact.

The man had flown his ski-equipped ultralight from Strobe Lake east of Haliburton Village to Head Lake, accompanied by a companion in a second ultralight. The friend had already landed when Drew circled the lake and appeared to be preparing for a final approach to land when the aircraft entered a steep right-hand turn and crashed nose first into the ice from about 100 feet.

An investigation of the man's medical history and the findings of the autopsy led the board to conclude that the loss of control was likely due to some physical incapacitation on the part of the pilot; likely a heart attack. Examination of the wreckage and the observations of the second pilot indicated there was nothing mechanically wrong with the aircraft prior to the crash.

Official opening

Cameron thanked the partners in the project, including the three levels of government, and also the townships of Snowdon and Sherborne et al, for putting their share of the infrastructure funding toward the project.

"Without these five partners, this project would not have come about," Cameron said.

He also thanked the engineers, architects and contractors, pointing out that the building was completed on time for the scheduled opening of court on June 1.

Cameron read a letter from Judge Timothy Whetung, who was unable to attend the opening ceremonies because of a prior trial commitment. Whetung sent his compliments and said that he looked forward to making good use of the facilities.

"I will make every effort to accommodate those involved in Minden matters by attempting to schedule their trials in the new courthouse to avoid travel to Lindsay," Whetung said in his letter.

Reverend Peter Walford-Davis dedicated the building.

After the National Anthem was sung, O'Reilly, Hodgson and Anson, Hindon and Minden council participated in the ribbon cutting ceremony.

The audience was then invited to tour the facilities and enjoy some refreshments.

Larger board: savings are not obvious quite small compared with the overall board budgets. Haliburton spends less than $100,000 annually, around one half of one percent of its $17 million budget — on its 15 trustees. Their salaries are around $6,000 each plus incidental expenses annually. Salaries in Northumberland-Clarington and Victoria are only slightly higher.

As for administration, all three boards asked (Peterborough officials weren't reached prior to publication time) report their administration costs are somewhere under five percent of their total budgets, though it depends somewhat what counts as an administration expense.

Saunders says that if the board office in Haliburton could simply be removed, including salaries of all three executives and their staff, maintenance costs, and all other expenses, the total savings would be around $500,000 a year.

"That," he says, "is a sizeable number. The question is, can you run this board without an office here?"

Elsewhere, among the four boards, the reaction of both board members and administrators has been similar to that in Haliburton.

Northumberland-Clarington chair Diana Stewart described her board as "very concerned" about the proposal. Northumberland-Clarington, she says, is already a hybrid, caught between largely rural Northumberland county in the east, and increasingly urban Clarington in the west.

Says Stewart, "I represent the eastern area and I already hear concerns like why do we have to pay for schools for the western area all the time — we never build them in our area. It's hard to explain to people. They don't understand why taxes go up at different rates in different municipalities. If we added the three other counties as this report would like us to do, we're just compounding the problem, especially in transportation. Transportation just gives me the horrors to think about."

Northumberland-Clarington is the southernmost and largest of the four boards in the proposed amalgamation, with 25,000 students, 61 schools, and an annual expenditures budget of $152 million. The board is also continually expanding, particularly in the west end, where two schools are currently under construction, and a third has just been approved.

Said Stewart, "The other thing I noticed when I read the report was that he said he would try to keep like communities together. Well, I'm not sure... I don't know if the east end of our board has anything in common with the west end. I certainly don't know what Haliburton has in common with either of them. It isn't fair to any of them."

Representatives of the Peterborough board have also expressed concerns related to public representation in the proposed board. The Peterborough board consists of 13 trustees, and currently serves approximately 19,000 students in 40 schools.

Said Peterborough chair Nancy Martin, "I am also concerned that the task force expects that nine trustees can effectively represent the educational interests of citizens in such a large and diverse area. I find it puzzling that amalgamation would reduce trustee representation in education, when over 250 people are elected to political office in municipalities covered by the current four boards."

Trent-Severn Waterway report

Smart Choices in the workplace

Smart Choices is a comprehensive alcohol education program designed specifically for the adult public. The Smart Choices program was created to help prevent alcohol problems by providing drinkers with moderation guidelines, and by identifying harmful drinking practices and the associated consequences. The campaign has unfolded through seven themes.

The latest poster to be displayed is entitled Out To Lunch and has a message for employees and employers alike. Employees who allow alcohol to interfere with work responsibilities are absent more often, involved in more accidents, less productive and, as a consequence, run the risk of losing their jobs.

Employers should be vitally concerned about workplace safety, productivity and liability risk. When employees work while under the influence of alcohol, these concerns can quickly turn into problems. As the Out to Lunch poster suggests, keeping alcohol out of the workplace is one way to "Make every drink a Smart Choice."

SUNDAY SEPTEMBER 17

Extremely dry weather abruptly ended with heavy rain on Thursday August 31. Amounts varied from about 70 mm around Peterborough to 11 mm in some parts of Haliburton. Heavy flows of water had been running from Haliburton to the Kawarthas, but were cut back to moderate flow after the rain. The Haliburton lakes are very close to their 20 year average for this time of the year and now stand at 58.5% (as of September 5).

The Kawarthas are now showing a surplus, so Gull Burnt and other tributaries' flows will be reduced again to near summer minimum. Some surplus will have to be discharged down the Ontonabee as well to prevent having a problem if heavy rains begin again soon. (Report issued September 6.)

Five Pathfinders presented with Canada Cords

--submitted--

The First Minden Pathfinders ended a very challenging and rewarding year in quiet celebration at Mr. D's Donuts back in June. As the year came to an end, it was a struggle for the girls as they attempted to accomplish the tasks of the Pathfinder program and the end of the year school work.

During the year, we held Silver Camp at Balsam lake Provincial Park, did crafts with seniors, sold Poppies with the Legion, sang Christmas Carols at Staunworth, created a float for the Lions Santa Claus parade, put together a wonderful "get well" basket for a fellow Pathfinder and held a very wet and chilly Gold Camp near Dorset's Frost Centre. (This weekend proved to be a test of endurance. Everyone involved passed with honours!)

After dinner, badges were presented by our tester, Frances Fleming, to all girls for achieving various levels of challenges. Mrs. Fleming volunteered her time to help us keep our records straight.

However, the most special presentation was reserved for five Pathfinders. Megan Sisson, Tara Sisson, Morgan Stackhouse, Jessica Belcher and Lisa Reinwald all received their Canada Cords. The Canada Cord represents the culmination of three years of work involving three levels of challenges. As these girls discovered, it wasn't an easy task, but in the end it was very rewarding. The girls will receive their cords in a formal presentation ceremony this fall in Oshawa. They now have the opportunity to continue their Guiding career as Rangers.

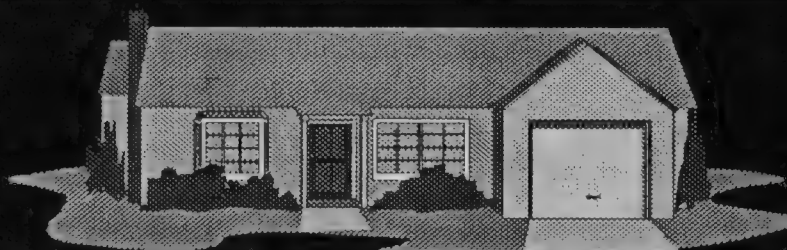

Many thanks to everyone who helped us throughout the year, including leaders Lisa Kowaltschuk, Kathy Stackhouse, Kathe Belcher and Georgina Kernohan. Pathfinders will hold an information meeting and registration on Monday, October 2 in the family studies room at Archie Stouffer Public School from 6:45 to 8 p.m. We have a limited number of spaces for girls in grade 7 and 9. We are also in desperate need of leaders. If you have the time, like the outdoors and enjoy the company of girls between the ages of 12 and 15, please join us on the night of October 3.

Minden Pathfinders

Rusty visits on Saturday

Janice is making sure the folks are staying in shape with fitness sessions Monday, Wednesday and Thursday mornings.

Pearl Cowan, Eleanor Crane and Mabel Deacon held a successful bingo session in the afternoon. Other folks boarded the bus for a short trip to Ingoldsby. They stopped at the Ingoldsby General Store for that popular ice cream cone.

In the evening Pearl and Corinne held cards. Tuesday morning Louise Leonard delivered the message at Chapel. A barbecue was held at noon with Tom McAllister as chef. In the afternoon we did crafts. We are doing many different projects.

Wednesday evening dinner was a barbecue in the outdoor activities area.

Thursday the Hyland Crest Auxiliary treated the residents to a lovely tea. They provided a birthday cake to honour those who celebrated August birthdays. A staff member provided music for a sing song.

Thursday dinner was again a barbecue. Soon the barbecues will be over. Once the cold weather comes they will have to stop until next spring. What a thought!

Friday, able residents congregated to fold serviettes for the dining room. Later they had a reading session with Mary Wilson. Eric Smythe came in and played the organ which he donated to the home. Connie and Mike Biagi and Frank Faulkner provided the entertainment for dancing at Friday Happy Hour. We have been having a large turnout of residents and family.

Saturday morning Rusty came to visit the folks--he is a beautiful Dalmatian owned by Janet Donnelly.

She will be bringing Rusty in on Saturday mornings Welcome aboard. In the afternoon John Menzies played renditions on the piano.

Sunday evening Rev. John Burgess delivered the sermon. June Mason accompanied the singing on the organ.

We welcome Lenore Troup on Monday and Tuesday mornings, she takes individual residents for walks. Lenore is a member of the auxiliary. Mary Wilson is doing shopping for the residents. They thank Muriel Harrington for all the shopping she did in the past.

Linda Fry has asked me to announce a meeting for those folks who volunteered to participate in our palliative care program. There will be a meeting at the home September 13, at 9 a.m. Training starts September 20th. Please try to attend.

I took a drive up to Rousseau today. The trees are starting to change colours. I know it's a beautiful sight but don't like the idea of what is to follow--cold weather and snow. I guess we will just have to dream about this beautiful summer which is coming to an end. I can't recall a better one in recent years.

Trivia: An ear of corn almost always has an even number of rows. You're likely to find them in rows of twelve, fourteen or sixteen.

Taiwan visitors

Minden welcomed visitors from all over the globe this past summer including these three young women from Taiwan. The trio, Lin Yun Jen, 26, Lee Hui-Min, 23 and Keui-Mei Lin, 25, spent several days here visiting various sites throughout the area, including Algonquin Park. Hosts for their stay were Cec and Dorothy Rowe of the Grey Manor Bed and Breakfast. While their home is in the far east, the three are familiar with North America as all are students at Indiana State University in Terre Haute. In addition to the Haliburton Highlands, their 12 day break from studies included stops in Quebec City, Toronto (they have friends in Mississauga) and Niagara Falls.

Simple rituals

In mid-August, driving from the ferry dock at Quathiaski Cove to Heriot Bay on Quadra Island, we pass empty cars clumsily and erratically pulled off the road. Then we notice people plunged to their elbows in thorny vines.

The blackberries are ripe! All through the island in Georgia Strait and the lower B.C. mainland, blackberries thrive and few things match the sensuous pleasure of a squirt of tangy, sweet juice and pulp from a ripe, sunwarmed fruit.

Bushes studded with plump, glistening berries prove irresistible, and even though we are frantic to reach the cottage, we finally succumb, pull off the road and wade in.

After reaching our place and satisfying our need to canoe, swim and feast on clams and oysters, we visit our neighbours, Dan and Audrey Leclerc. Well into their 70s, they enthral us with their knowledge of local lore and history. They have just gathered wild chanterelle mushrooms and traded them at the local store for peaches. Audrey has finished bottling the peaches and now is cooking apples to make jam. Audrey shows us salmon soaking in brown sugar and salt that will be smoked tomorrow. Dan's sister says "Audrey is so fast she prepares four salmon for every one I do."

Dan tells us "We just got back from a trip on the boat. Got our limit in cod, but they're getting smaller and harder to find." Dan and Audrey fished for a living many years ago and still consistently catch fish all through the Discovery Islands.

"We were skunked seven times this year," Dan tells us sadly. "Finally got lucky on this trip. We caught a nice 16 pound spring salmon and a coho." Then he adds a shocker: "But I feel guilty. Chinook and coho are going extinct. We shouldn't be catching them at all. I've decided to stop fishing for salmon any more. We should be paying more attention to herring. They've about disappeared and if there's no herring, there's no food."

He knows more than any salmon management "expert" and Dan's warning scares me. As we leave, we are offered a basket of blackberries. Audrey and Dan picked along the road.

When I was a boy, the year was marked by specific signposts. One of the earliest was asparagus; when they appeared, I would roam along the railroad tracks gathering the delectable spears.

Growing up in the farm country of Essex county in southern Ontario, I have vivid memories of the delight when cherries ripened, followed by strawberries, raspberries, tomatoes, melon and peaches.

As each fruit or vegetable made its appearance, our kitchen filled with wonderful aromas of jam, preserves, or pickles. Today, as food matures through the seasons, I recapture the childhood expectation and excitement.

As a child, time seemed to creep along as I waited for some special treat like Halloween, a birthday or Christmas. But all that waiting and anticipation heightened the joy when the event finally did arrive.

Patience has little virtue these days because there's no need to wait any more. If we want something now, thanks to modern technology, we can often gratify that demand instantly.

With the entire planet as a source of products marketed by major corporations, we can choose from a mind-boggling assortment of consumer products.

A radio commercial invites us to "choose from 10,000 products under a single roof." And once the novelty of new purchases fades, we can forage for more in malls and megastores.

Here on Quadra, freed from the demands of a telephone, television and daily newspaper, I rearrange my city-formed priorities. It is sheer delight to see an eagle snatch a fish right in front of you, watch a river otter running off with one of our oysters, or snorkel among the squid laying eggs just off our dock.

My daughter invented a game of "shipwrecked," and we gather seaweed, limpets and periwinkles to cook on the beach. The taste is exquisite.

Playing with the children and simple meals gathered from the shores and forest are so much more intense and satisfying here than in the city. We are "slowed down," so there is delight in the most elementary discoveries or acts. But why do we do this on holiday?

In cities, where most of us live, we are assaulted by noise, images and pollution, so in order to function we have to clamp down our senses and ignore much of the sensory input. Quadra shows us how to open up to our surroundings more deeply.

What are our aspirations for fulfilment and happiness? Will it come through more economic growth and more and cheaper consumer goods? If we learn to take time, open our senses and pay more attention to our surroundings, we find there are other rewards and we can live more lightly on the planet.

For me, picking blackberries is a simple ritual that acknowledges the changing seasons and reconnects us with the Earth.

River water temp. Aug. 31	22.0	71.6
River water temp. Aug. 31/94	20.0	68.0

August was a lovely summer month. A few hot, humid days, but all in all, great. The weather was much like July. In fact there was only .3 degree difference in the average temperature between July and August. Last year, August was much wetter and cooler.

The river water temperature was the highest I have ever recorded, reaching a peak of 25 degrees (77 F) on August 24. It returned to normal by the end of the month, helped by cooler nights. There was some frost on August 25; none at this station, but some was noticed at Hunter Creek Estates and Scotch Line. There was heavy rain August 26, otherwise normal rain and showers during the month.

It is not by choice that I am no longer employed at the Medical Centre. The Lion's Club had a plan and a job to do and I just wasn't to be part of that plan. I will miss the staff I worked with, the patients, with whom many I had become quite close to, but most of all I will miss the job that I thought I did fairly well. I wish the Lion's Medical Centre and its staff good luck and the patients, good health. I will very much miss being there.

CARDS OF THANKS

Heartfelt thanks to all the new friends I met and parted with during my stay in Minden. Special thanks to my friend and hostess Annie and family and to Jack for the photograph of the Quartet. Only in Canada they say! No way!! Only in Minden! Scots Wha' Hae!

John H. Rodger.

Larry, Lisa, Jeremy and all the Tompkins family wish to extend our deep gratitude to all who were so helpful and caring during these last difficult weeks. Special thanks to Sgt. Rick Gooch and the Minden OPP Detachment and to the doctors and staff at Minden Hospital. Many thanks to all our friends who provided accommodations and food to help us through and for all the kindness expressed in cards, visitations and memorial donations. We are grateful for Monk Funeral Home's quiet understanding and direction through Barry Cray and thanks to Milton Barry's prayers and counsel, we have begun our long journey toward healing. Time and friendship are precious, irreplaceable gifts and we thank you for both. We shall miss our Jenna always.

To all our friends, neighbours and relatives who extended to us good wishes, congratulations and gifts on the occasion of our 50th wedding anniversary celebration, we wish to express our heartfelt thanks and gratitude. The greetings from the offices of Romeo LeBlanc, Governor General of Canada; Jean Chretien, Prime Minister of Canada; John O'Reilly, our M.P.; Michael Harris, Premier of Ontario; Chris Hodgson, our M.P.P. and Thomas Dingwall, the Lord Provost of Glasgow, Scotland, were all greatly appreciated. Our children did a fabulous job in organizing the open house and dinner at Lochaven Inn (the food and service were great!) Special thanks to all who attended locally and from afar to make our celebration such an unforgettable memory.

Claude and Margaret Brown.

CARDS OF THANKS

Thanks to all who sent cards and those who called my secretary Dorothy on my behalf. You're a great bunch of guys and gals. A special thanks to Dorothy Ash for being housekeeper, cook, chauffeur, nurse and good friend. You are the best Dorth!

IN MEMORIAM

BOWMAN - In loving memory of our daughter Pegganne. It's a year ago you left us Broken hearted and very sad We miss you so much, There's not a day goes by You're not on our minds and in our thoughts. You sure are missed but not forgotten honey. Ever remembered, Mom and Dad.

JOHNSTON, Ellwood - In loving memory of a husband and father who passed away September 12, 1985.

Your end was very sudden, No time to say goodbye, You were gone before we realized And we will never know why. The things we felt so deeply Are the hardest things to say But we, your family miss you In more than words can say. Whatever else we fail to do We never fail to think of you. A smile for all, a heart of gold, One of the best, the world could hold. Never selfish, always kind. These are the memories you left behind. If pain could build a stairway And heartaches make a lane We'd walk the path to Heaven And bring you home again. Lovingly remembered by your wife Ruby and Family.
